HISTORIA

See How the ancient Spaniards hunted bulls on horseback in the countryside.

This preparatory drawing passed by inheritance in 1828 to Javier Goya, the painter's son, and in 1854 to Mariano Goya y Goicoechea, the artist's grandson. It was subsequently owned by Valentín Carderera (ca. 1861) and Mariano Carderera (1880). In 1886 it was acquired from Mariano Carderera, along with many other drawings by Goya, including almost all the preparatory studies for the Bullfight, by the Directorate General of Public Instruction, and was assigned to the Prado Museum, where it entered on 12 November 1886.

ANÁLISIS ARTÍSTICO

See How the ancient Spaniards hunted bulls on horseback in the countryside.

First of the two preparatory drawings for the print Two groups of bullfighters being run over at once by a single bull. The present preparatory study, which focuses exclusively on the central group of the future print, is characterised by its great precision and detail. In it we see the bull charging a horse with the picador on top of it, who is thrusting his pike into the bull's neck. Between the two contenders, contrasting in their posture and lighting - the horse receives more light than the bull - a fierce fight is taking place. Behind the two fighting animals we can see a series of figures, probably labourers, who are trying to separate the bull from the horse, as the bull has a piton stuck in the equine's belly. In the corner on the left, in the foreground, another picador's horse is lying on the ground with its guts spilled after a previous attack by the bull. In the background, the barrier is indicated in summary form, unlike what Goya would do in the second preparatory drawing and in the definitive engraving.

On the back of the sheet there is a slight hint of a horse in sanguine and traces of sanguine in contact with other drawings.
